Up-Skilling Non-Programmers to Java Technology

The UCD School of Computer Science and Informatics (www.csi.ucd.ie) together with UCD campus company crovan is offering training for IT professionals who have recently been made redundant. This is one of a number of initiatives that the School is currently undertaking to participate in the National Recovery Plan. The training will enable IT professionals who are non-programmers, to become familiar and proficient with Java systems and technologies and to help to prepare them for the Sun Certified Java Associate (SCJA) qualification. UCD are offering a week long course and the intention is that a person that is not familiar with Java would be brought up to the level required of the examination. The course is of one week's duration and is based in UCD. At the end of each course the students will receive a letter of attendance, and on successful completion of an end-of-course examination they will receive a letter of proficiency from the School.
